FINDING LOOPHOLES IN YOUR CASE

The types of defenses that can be used in a drunk driving case include:

- Blood Alcohol Concentration: Given the many problems that occur in breath and blood testing, an examination of the tests and results may produce a DUI defense. The testing equipment, environmental conditions, medical conditions of the defendant, and the implementation of the test can all be called in to question to find a possible DUI defense. The blood or breath test also has to comply with Washington regulations in regards to calibration, maintenance, and testing procedures.
- Probable Cause: If the Seattle police officer who arrested you did not have probable cause to stop, detain, and arrest you for drunk driving, the evidence against you may be suppressed. There are certain regulations and procedures police officers must follow when making a DUI arrest and if they fail to do any part of this your charges may be dismissed.
- Implied Consent Warnings: If you were not advised by the police officer about the consequences of refusing to take a blood or breath test, or if the test was not given correctly, the test results may be deemed inadmissible.
- Miranda Rights: If you were not read your Miranda rights or if your rights were not given to you at an appropriate time, incriminating statements may be suppressed.
- Plea Bargains: If you go to trial for a DUI and win, the case will be dismissed. If you lose, however, the judge has full discretion in what penalties you will be given. Instead of taking this chance, it is sometimes wiser to negotiate a plea bargain. A plea bargain is determine between your attorney and the prosecutor, and this tool can bring about a reduced sentence, a reduced charge, or both.
